This experiment made me realize how hard it would be to be a drug addict. I found it really difficult to hide my addiction. I constantly had family members asking me what I was doing and what those were that was in my drink.

When making the ice cubes, my little brother came in the room and was asking me why I was making red ice cubes. It was hard to hold back and not tell him, but he eventually just said that I am really weird and walked out of the room. When I was having a glass of water my mom started talking to me and in the middle of her sentence she asked me if that was the cool thing to do these days, to drink with colored ice cubes. I had to hold back some laughter but she just went back to talking.

The twine was really hard to wear. I decided to wear it around my ankle and it was extremely itchy. There was one point where I was scratching my ankle without thinking about it and one of my friends asked me what I was wearing. I wanted to explain to him so badly what I was doing so he didn't think I was weird but I didn't and it all worked out fine. Luckily I never woke up in the middle of the night to get a drink of water because I'm sure my family would've thought I was crazy. '

Over all I thought this experiment was very interesting and fun to do. I enjoyed watching my family stare at me every time I went to the freezer. I explained to them afterward's what I had been doing and it all made sense to them. I was surprised that I lasted the whole time without telling anyone. But I think this was a good experiment.
